

NEW YORK, July 5 (Reuters) - U.S. Treasury debt prices extended losses on Wednesday after a strong report on private sector employment growth for June, which indicated that Friday's influential non-farm payrolls report could be robust.

The National Employment Report by Automatic Data Processing, showed a gain of 368,000 private sector jobs in June, steeply up from a gain of 122,000 in May.

Benchmark 10-year notes <US10YT=RR> fell 8/32 in price for a yield of 5.19 percent, versus 5.17 percent just before the report and versus 5.15 percent late on Monday. U.S. bond markets were closed on Tuesday for the U.S. Independence day holiday.

Bond yields and prices move inversely.
